Dear Colleagues,

Welcome!

In 2013, then-Secretary of Defense Leon Panetta made the historic decision to eliminate the military’s exclusionary policy that closed ground combat occupations and units to women. Announcing the end of the combat exclusions, Secretary Panetta ordered that henceforth any decision to exclude women be made as an exception rather than the rule, thereby flipping the paradigm from one of automatic exclusion to one of automatic inclusion.

The order gave the Services and Special Operations Command three years to determine how to successfully integrate women into previously closed occupations and units. If prior to the conclusion of the three year period, the Services found an occupation or unit that could not be successfully integrated an exception to policy could be requested. However, any exceptions would be “narrowly tailored and based on a rigorous analysis of factual data regarding the knowledge, skills and abilities needed for the position.” In the FY2015 NDAA Congress codified the requirement for gender neutral occupational standards that “accurately predict performance of actual, regular, and recurring duties of a military occupation; and are applied equitably to measure individual capabilities.”

No later than October 1, 2015, the Services and SOCOM must submit requests for an exception to policy to keep any occupations or units closed. If no exceptions are submitted all occupations and units (more than 240,000 currently closed positions) will be open to women on January 1, 2016.

In 2013, Women in International Security (WIIS) established the Combat Integration Initiative (CII) program to research, track and advise on the activities and efforts of the Services and SOCOM as they move toward full integration. Today’s event provides an update, analysis and assessment of what OSD, the Services and SOCOM have done to integrate women into previously closed combat positions.

This conference is a collaborative effort of many people and groups. We offer a special word of thanks to our Congressional sponsors — Representative Loretta Sanchez and Representative Martha McSally. We sincerely appreciate their vocal support and continued effort toward the full and successful integration of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Thanks also go to our funders and sponsors — The Alliance for National Defense, the Reserve Officers Association, No Exceptions, Robert Kaufman and Joy Smith Bronson. Their support has been key and has allowed us to bring together many experts.

Lastly, a great many thanks to our colleagues at WIIS, Stephanie Breitsmen, Julienne Denecke, Gabe Dayley, Sung-gyu Hong and Brooke Stedman.

Sincerely,

Chantal de Jonge Oudraat

For more than 90 years the Reserve Officers Association has been the only organization dedicated to supporting Reservists and their critical role in national defense. Reserve service carries unique burdens and for more than nine decades, the Reserve Officers Association has been the nation’s leading advocate for lifelong support in recognition of these unprecedented contributions to the cause of freedom.
Women In International Security (WIIS) is the only global network actively advancing women’s leadership, at all stages of their careers, in the international peace and security field.
